COMMUNITY HEALTH WORKER

Train to Become a Community Health Worker in Just 5 Months!

Community Health Workers (CHWs) are frontline public health workers who have a close understanding and passion for the community they will be serving. Community Health Workers provide health and social service support to individuals in the community and also build community capacity by increasing health knowledge and self-sufficiency through a range of activities such as community education, counseling, and advocacy.

Community Health Workers are known by many titles, depending on where they work, who they work for and what they do. Common job titles include Health Coach, Community Health Advocate, Health Educator, Outreach Worker, Peer Counselor, and Patient Navigator.

Working with a Community Care team including Doctors, Nurses, Therapists and Social Workers, CHWs conduct home visits, facilitate transportation and patient appointments, link patients to supportive services and teach patients self-management techniques with the goal of improving health outcomes.

If you are interested in entering the growing health care sector and are looking for a career pathway which will allow you to explore your passion for helping others and building community, then Community Health Worker may be the position for you.

As a CHW, your responsibilities will be to help individuals, families, groups and communities develop their capacity and access resources, including health insurance, food, housing, and quality care and health information.

What is a Community Health Worker?

"...a frontline public health worker who is a trusted member of and has an unusually close understanding of the community served. This trusting relationship enables the CHW to serve as a liaison/link/intermediary between health/social services and the community to facilitate access to services and improve the quality and cultural competence of service delivery." – The American Public Health Association

Register today to attend a mandatory orientation either virtual via Zoom or on Campus to learn more about becoming a Community Health Worker.
